PEKING YIELDS TO JAPAN ON SHANTUNG QUESTION

TOKIO SEES DANGER IN ACTION TAKEN BY FRANCE

Government Now Fears Whole Naval Program May Be Wrecked

WORKERS ROUSED

Police Suppress Labor Protest Against Plan For Limitation

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, Jan. 6.—The full naval Committee have finally accepted the first two Root proposals applying the existing naval warfare rules to submarines, and banning all submarine attacks against merchantmen, the ban becoming immediately effective between the five signatory Powers.

(Trans-Pacific News Service Exclusive To The China Press)

Tokio, Jan. 6.—On high authority it has been learned that the Japanese Government now is actively concerned over the danger that the stand France has taken on the submarine question may have the effect of nullifying agreements already reached regarding the limitation of other classes of warships.

It is understood that the Cabinet has instructed the delegation to seek a separate solution of the submarine problem and at the soonest possible moment bring about the final action on the naval agreement embodying all earlier Conference decisions on the subject of capital ships and other phases of naval limitation.

TO SEND INSTRUCTIONS

The Cabinet meeting on Saturday discussed the naval program and the Shantung problem. A meeting of the diplomatic advisory council, which followed the Cabinet meeting considered the Cabinet's decisions. New instructions probably will be forwarded to Washington Saturday evening or Sunday morning.

Tokio has shown little concern over the disclosures made at Washington by the Chita delegation. The allegations are denied officially and are generally disbelieved.

WORKERS AROUSED

Tokio police prevented a mass meeting and demonstrations that were scheduled for today to protest against increased unemployment which is anticipated as a result of action of the Washington Conference to limit armaments and cut down the activities of Japan's big shipyards.

Though demonstrations were forbidden, labor organisations were permitted to distribute hand bills at the main traffic centers of the city. These affirm labor's support of the idea of disarmament, but protest it is the purpose of capitalists to shift to the shoulders of labor the whole burden of the coming restrictions in naval building by the wholesale dismissal of dockyard workers.

Hundreds of thousands of these hand bills were distributed to crowds visiting the principal shrines in accordance with New Year's custom.

ALL EUROPE EXPECTANT OVER CANNES CONFERENCE

Lloyd George's Task Is To Reconcile Views On Big Question:

SCHEME OUTLINED

Plan For 1922 Payments By Germany Framed By The British

(Reuter's Service)

London, Jan. 5.—The eyes of Europe are fixed anxiously on the Cannes Conference. The problem facing Mr. Lloyd George is to reconcile the British and French views on reparations, armaments and relations with Germany and Russia.

As regards reparations, it is reported that the British propose that the German gold payments for 1922 should be limited to £25,000,000 payable in instalments ending on April 15, the balance of £100,000,000 liability to be fulfilled by deliveries in kind.

Mr. Lloyd George has already had a preliminary two hours' conversation with M. Briand. The former is known to entertain ambitious plans for international economic and, possibly, political co-operation to get Europe on her feet again with the participation of Germany and Russia.

The stumbling-block in Paris and some British quarters is a strong distrust of Germany. It is anticipated that a wider international conference will follow the present one.

CONFERENCE OPENS

(Reuter's Service)

Cannes, Jan. 5.—The conference opened quietly today. Sir Robert Horne, M. Loucheur, and the Italian and Belgian financial representatives held a preliminary reparations conference this morning, while Mr. Lloyd George this afternoon held a consultation with M. Briand and Signor Bonomi upon questions of policy.

It is understood that Lord Curzon and the Marquis della Toretta discussed the question of Asia Minor, but this matter is not likely to be settled at the present conference, as the agenda is already over-full.

Talk On Journalism Heard By Students Of College Of Commerce

A lecture on the "Profession of Journalism" was delivered yesterday by Mr. Don D. Patterson, acting editor of the Weekly Review of the Far East before the students and faculty of the Shanghai College of Commerce. Dr. P. W. Kuo, President of the Southeastern University, of which the college is a branch, presided.

After paying a tribute to China for having got out the earliest newspaper and having first invented the art of printing, the speaker drew a word picture of the stages by which journalism first in Europe and then in America has been brought to its present stage of efficiency. The profession of journalism is one of public service, declared the speaker, which is manifested in various forms such as the recording of happenings of public interest, the interpretation of the meaning of current events, the advocacy of reforms, the promotion of the spirit of mutual understanding and sympathy, and the fulfilment of the numerous duties devolving on journalists as responsible trustees of the public. Mr. Patterson said he believed that the progress made in Chinese journalism during the last fifty years augurs well for a great future of journalistic achievement that will mean much for the welfare of China and the better economic condition of the world.

Club Women Hear Instructive Talk On Child Welfare

The Regular Meeting of the Mother's Department of the American Woman's Club was held yesterday morning at the Carlton Cafe with Mrs. Van Buskirk in the chair. Dr. Appleton, who came to Shanghai four months ago for the Y. W. C. A. to be their representative on the Council on Health Education, gave a most helpful talk on child welfare.

Dr. Appleton had worked with Dr. Lucas in France on child welfare and is well fitted to speak on the subject. He began by saying "That the problems of mothers and children are the same in China as in other countries. The health of the mothers and children is an index of the health of the community. The care of the health does not mean great systems but the care of the individual, therefore." She laid stress on teaching mothers the value of pre-natal care. Then comes the care of the baby. Care in feeding, dressing, bathing, etc.

Since the introduction of infant welfare centers there had been a great reduction in infant mortality in all countries. In England, for instance, where the mothers have come to the welfare centers, thirty-two babies out of every one thousand had died; where, through ignorance, the mothers had not gone one hundred and seventeen babies in every one thousand had died. Infant mortality in the country was much greater than in the city owing to the lack of baby welfare centers, hospitals, good doctors, clinics, etc. Dr. Appleton also stressed the importance of dental hygiene and the need of recreation for children.

Dr. J. H. Gray, Head of the Physical Department of the Y. M. C. A. in China, will speak at the next meeting, January 18, on the value of exercise for children in producing good health and efficiency.

Sing-Song Girl Antedates, Also Survives Cabaret Riot

By Elsie McCormick

If a compradore has ever invited you to a dinner, you probably recall that somewhere between the sixth and ninth pork courses, your host called for a few sheets of red paper and [illegible] foot-prints of antediluvian vertebrates. About ten minutes later the party was interrupted by the entry of a young lady who sparkled like Tiffany's Fifth Avenue window. She smiled apologetically, settled on the edge of a chair about two feet from the table, adjusted her hot water bottle, and went into silent contemplation.

Nobody offered her anything to eat and just as you had about forgotten her existence, she fixed her eyes on the ceiling and broke suddenly into a series of yowls that would outdistance a Cat Show. After being startled into upsetting your sharks' fins, you suddenly realised what had happened. You had just been formally introduced to the Shanghai sing-song girl.

Though foreigners seldom appreciate her contribution to the entertainment, a Chinese party without a sing-song girl would be as incomplete as a pussy without whiskers. All evening long on Shanghai's Rialto the pieces of red paper flow along the street, and the little, powdered, irridescent ladies follow in their wake. Fifteen minutes is usually the limit of her stay at one party. She sits near the table or stands behind a chair, sings one or two alleged musical numbers, then picks up her hot water bottle and races her embroidered shoes toward the place designated on the next piece of red paper.

SHE STANDS UNIQUE

There is no class of women in the world quite corresponding to the Chinese sing-song girl. Foreigners should not confuse her with members of an older and less honored profession. Nor is she like the cabaret singer of the West, partly because her talents are usually exercised at private functions, but chiefly because she is supposed to belong in a modest way to the intelligenzia. She is expected to converse brilliantly if called upon to do so, and it is often said that in China the sing-song girls possess a larger fund of political.

Japanese Army Reductions Are Urged By Militarist

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, Jan. 1.—"To those who can dispassionately and impartially judge the situation at home and abroad, the reduction of armaments is no longer a question, the only question now is to what extent armaments can be reduced."

This is the opening sentence of an article from the pen of Major-General Tsunekichi Kawano, which deals with army reductions and which appears in the Tokio and Osaka Asahi.

A statement of this kind, coming from an officer of the standing of General Kawano, coupled with the recent announcement in the Tokio Nichi Nichi that in high army circles preliminary investigations are now being made with a view to a fundamental army reconstruction, is regarded in many quarters as indicating a change of mental attitude on the part of the military command.

PURPOSE OUTLINED

The reforms predicted by the Nichi Nichi are, according to well-informed persons, substantially correct. While as yet no details of the plan in view are available, briefly stated it includes a reduction of personnel within the next four or five years by 50,000 men, the adoption and intensive training in the use of the most modern arms and radical reforms in the administration of the commissariat and war supplies departments.

That these changes are even contemplated is considered by many thinkers as sufficient evidence to show that the more progressive elements in the military command are making their influence felt. There are believed to be a considerable number of army officers, both of higher and of lower rank, who have come to realise that the army, as at present constituted is gradually losing the support of intelligent people at home, and who are fully aware of the disadvantages to Japan of its remaining an object of suspicion and apprehension to the rest of the world.

In the course of his remarks General Kawano explains how the Twenty-Five division program came to be formulated. He tells how Japan began the war with Russia with a basic force of twelve divisions, and how, in spite of a continuous series of victories, the lack of sufficient man power practically robbed her of the fruits of those victories. The dangers which the country faced at that time, he says, called for the expansion of the army, and the new program of twenty-five divisions was drawn up, not for purposes of aggression, but solely in order to guarantee the safety of the Empire, should it ever be necessary to fight another war with a first class power.

Now, says General Kawano, the world is striving for peace, and no dangers face Japan in the Far East. It is unnecessary for the General Staff to complete its program of expansion. In fact, in his opinion, all the military force that Japan requires at present is the strength she possessed at the commencement of the Russo-Japanese war—twelve divisions with the division of the Guards.

DIRECT NEGOTIATIONS ARE CARRIED FORWARD SECRETLY AT CAPITAL

Messages Sent From Washington On Saturday By People's Delegates Reveal New Premier Sent Instructions To Delegation To Accept Terms Of Nipponese For Purchase Of Railway

DAMAGING EFFECT FELT IN AMERICA

"All Past Efforts And Fight For China's Rights In Future Are Futile Because Of The Action Peking Has Taken," Is Wording Of Cablegram

Peking, Jan. 6.—Messages received from Washington bring to light that direct negotiations for adjustment of the Shantung question have been in progress in Peking and a cable said to have been sent to the Chinese delegation by the new premier, Liang Shih-yi, calls upon the delegation to yield to the Japanese demands regarding the Shantung railway.

These disclosures are contained in messages sent from Washington on Saturday by Dr. David Z. T. Yui and Dr. Monlin Chiang, so-called people's delegates, who conveyed the information to the various organisations responsible for sending them to the Conference.

The text of the message of the two people's delegates, issued by the Kuo Wen News Agency, is as follows:

"While the Peking delegates have been very firm in their stand on the Shantung question and the 21 Demands, direct negotiations have been conducted between Peking and Tokio without the knowledge of the delegates here.

"A startling telegram came this morning from Liang Shih-yi instructing the delegates to accept Japan's terms, namely for a loan from Japan for purchasing the Shantung railway and joint Japanese control. This action is calculated to enable the Peking Government to get more funds from Japan.

"The news that direct negotiations were being carried on in Peking was received in America with damaging effect. The Japanese delegates are telling the American public that Peking has accepted their terms. All past efforts and fight for China's rights in the future are futile because of Peking's action."

Other messages sent from Washington to Peking tell that at the suggestion of Mr. Hughes and Mr. Balfour, the Chinese and Japanese delegates resumed their conversations on the Shantung railway today. The Japanese delegates declared that Tokio was disinclined to accept China's proposals and insisted upon making a loan to China. It is reported that Mr. Obata, the Japanese Minister in Peking, had received authority for this from Liang Shih-yi, the Peking Premier.

GIVES CONFIRMATION

(China Press Service)

Washington, January 5.—Reports received here from Peking that W. W. Yen, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the Japanese Minister, Mr. Obata, have started secret negotiations on Shantung have been freely circulated. It also charged in reports from Peking that the Japanese Minister is exerting every pressure to prevent the insistence of the Chinese Government urging a decision on Shantung and the Twenty-One Demands.

Chinese students throughout the United States have expressed opposition to the new Cabinet.

In the meantime, negotiations on Shantung and the Twenty-One Demands are delayed until the Japanese delegation receives further instructions from Tokio.

The conference will hold its final sessions on January 15, it was announced today.

ASK RAIL BOARD

Washington, Jan. 5.—The Committee on Far Eastern Affairs has recommended the appointment of an international board to investigate and make a report on the railways of China.

SHOWS 'CHINA'S GAIN'

Reuter's Special Service

Washington, Jan. 5.—Reviewing the work of the Conference and the number of beneficial results emerging therefrom, one of the most distinguished members of the British delegation declared that China had obtained a good deal, and pointed out that the Powers had agreed to form a nursing ring around China in order to prevent her being damaged during the process of evolution resulting from her recent revolution.

He quoted as an instance how the United States took seventy-five years to establish a stable government, while the Chinese Republic had only existed ten years. He declared that the moral pledge entered into by eight nations to support China was a thing that no other nation had ever obtained before in the history of the world.

RESUME DEBATE

Washington, Jan. 5.—The Chinese and Japanese delegates resumed the Shantung discussions this afternoon at the request of the State Department, after which they jointly commented that they would resume the meeting tomorrow when the discussions would be completed.

JAPS AND CHINESE MEET

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, Jan. 5.—At yesterday's meeting, the Chinese and Japanese delegates directly discussed three alternative plans for the payment of the Shantung railway. It is stated that the Japanese reasserted their demand for payment through a Japanese loan, which the Chinese declined, declaring that they had not receded from the proposal for payment in cash in 15 yearly instalments.

The situation rested here when the meeting adjourned, with neither side willing to comment on the ultimate possibility of a satisfactory settlement. Dr. Wang declared that the Chinese formally declined to consider a Japanese loan and that they would expect definite acceptance or rejection of either of the Chinese alternatives.

Dr. Wellington Koo denied two reports, one allegedly from a Japanese source and the other from a representative of South China to the effect that the Peking Government was ready to accept the Japanese loan proposal.

Despite the lack of Chinese optimism, British and American officials are hopeful of a successful outcome now that the deadlock has been broken.

Amateur Dramatic Club Scores Pleasing Success

(The following admirable criticism of the Shanghai Amateur Dramatic Club's latest production, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," which appeared yesterday in THE EVENING STAR, is reprinted by special request).

BY W. BRUCE LOCKHART

In presenting Jerome K. Jerome's golden phantasy yesterday evening for their 188th production the A. D. C. Committee adventured ambitiously and, on the whole, I think, have brought their barque safely into port.

In finding A Passer By (Mr. H. E. Muriel) a 'Stasia (Mrs. J. A. Cochrane), and a Major Tompkins (Mr. N. G. Maitland), of these calibres, the A. D. C. have been thrice blessed, for this trinity of characters require the most careful and delicate limning lest their beauty and pathos be marred, and incontinently merge into bathos.

Happily such obvious distinction of artistry and talent has been brought into the work of these players that, despite the ephemeral nature of dramatic art, their master shares in Thursday evening's performance must surely remain a not evanescent memory in which their friends will take a just pride and keen pleasure.

The clew of Jerome's masterpiece, as I read it, is to be found in the epilogue, when The Passer By, now become the beloved and revered Friend of all that little company of men and women teaches them the golden Gospel of Life—"Ah, of all, the best thing in Life is the Giving!"

The dramatist has taken an extraordinarily commonplace and human subject, and from the woof and warp of a frowsy Bloomsbury Boarding House has woven a gossamer garment of surpassing texture, for, if we are candid, it is none other than the mantle of The Christ that is thrown about each one, covering them, warming them, comforting them with the vision and the Fullness of Life realised—the great worth of living for others.

It is well that amidst the murky materialism and interested selfishness of our daily lives we should be given pause in this way.

In undertaking "The Passer By," Mr. H. E. Muriel essays to follow the sure firm steps of perhaps the most intellectual and spiritual English actor of our generation, Sir J. Forbes Robertson, and in attempting greatly, he has greatly achieved.

It would be so easy to fail, it is so difficult to succeed, and in bringing a quiet dignity of demeanor, an atmosphere of aloofness mingled with sweetness and the omnipresent spirit of sympathy and understanding, into his work, Mr. Muriel has rendered greatly and rendered well. He is intellectual, he is spiritual.

The "Stasia" of Mrs. J. A. Cochrane is worthy of her Friend and reveals powers of intimate characterisation of a high order.

I do not know whether Mrs. Cochrane has had professional experience but it is perfectly evident that this lady possesses consummate ability in this genre.

I was struck by a detail, perhaps not of great importance, yet details are important. "Stasia" must be the foreshortened colloquialism of Anastasia, yet each one of the players who had occasion to use her name persisted in pronouncing it as "Stacia," with the exception of Mr. Muriel who called her "Stazia," which, of course, is the usual pronunciation of this terminal.

It would be as well perhaps if the company decided to adopt Mr. Muriels' reading, for the sake of uniformity. Besides, he is their leader.

The "Stasia" of Mrs. Cochrane has an artistic merit and a natural verisimilitude far outranking the professional "Stasia" played at the Lyceum in March 1912. She is greatly to be congratulated.

Mr. N. G. Maitland's artistic successes on the boards of the Lyceum and the concert platform are too well known in Shanghai to need reference at this time but in providing the humor of the evening his "Major Tompkins" stood out as a finished and ever delightful performance.

POLISHED WORK

I failed to observe any suspicion of burlesque in his portraiture of the impecunious major.

It was an entirely polished piece of work revealing meticulous attention to detail and a quiet but intensely sure command of the special qualities of the naturally real humorist.

There is a peculiar pleasure in watching the artistically sure and certain method of this brilliant amateur whose sardonic diction and finished mannerisms echo the confidence of outstanding ability.

The Landlady, "Mrs. Sharpe," of Mrs. Dudley Reid, suffered a little in the prologue from a natural and quite excusable nervousness, but as the evening wore on Mrs. Reid became more sure of herself and is to be congratulated on a highly creditable performance, particularly as she had one of the heaviest parts in the play. Mrs. Reid need have no reason to feel nervous so far as the merit of her work is concerned, for it has merit. Her playing with the Third Floor Back in the second act was excellent.

One rather hastens through the cast at this juncture but perforce must pause to pay compliments to the "Joey Wright" (Retired Bookmaker) as portrayed by Mr. G. B. Stormes. "Wright" had surcease from the calling of odds owing to the breakdown of his voice, and it was in this important detail that Mr. Stormes gave an effective and most natural presentment.

His voice, far away, wheezy, and nearly lost, was excellently done and places another notch to Mr. Stormes' lengthy list of successes in low comedy.

"Jake Samuels," a Jew, played by Mr. W. A. Kearton was quite good with the exception that he was indistinct, but I fancy he should easily remedy this defect at the next performance.

It is a meet thing that the virtues of the great Jewish race should be stressed, as J. K. J. stresses them, and particularly amidst this mystical framework so redolent of the beauteous character of that sublime Jew whom half the Earth have worshipped as a God.

In drawing to a close one recalls the line of a famous critic—"let criticism do the little it can to embalm the memory of fine acting, and suffer the rest to pass unchronicled into oblivion."

If one may offer a suggestion to the producer it is to remind that the venue and entire environment of this play is a second rate Bloomsbury Place Boarding House, whose denizens are undoubtedly rather dingy and impecunious quite ordinary men and women.

A LITTLE SUGGESTION

It seems an anachronism, therefore, when some of the lady boarders of this menage appear adorned with gowns and hats one would expect to see at the Berkely or Hyde Park Hotels but surely and certainly not in a Bloomsbury Place boarding establishment.

Having sojourned awhile in sundry of these institutions I do assure the producer it is an artistic sartorial inexactitude to allow his lady players to appear in outfits of an obviously beautiful, but, also, beautifully obvious most expensive variety.

Alas, they verge on discord amid the melody of a great chord.

And, do the men lodgers at such institutions invariably dress for dinner at 6:30 p.m?

From internal evidence of the play itself we know that Major Tompkins had not paid his boarding account for three months and, indeed, was reduced to the extremity of annexing public provender for his private sustenance within the haven of his hat. Yet Mrs. and Miss Tompkins appear beautifully gowned to a degree surely impossible in London, where the credit system is not so highly developed as it is in these latitudes!

The overdressing of some of the minor parts in the cast could perhaps be modified with advantage, since this is so essentially a play where lines and their enunciation count as everything, and gowns are nothing.

The next performance is this evening, and those of the public who have not already seen the play will miss a pleasure if they do not go.

FIVE HUNDRED AT BALL GIVEN BY WILMINGTON MEN

A gay crowd, numbering in the neighborhood of 500 persons, gathered at the Astor House last night for the ball given by the officers and men of the U. S. S. Wilmington.

Admiral Bullard and his staff were present and the affair throughout was of a most enjoyable nature. The ball room decorations figured principally around the American flag and the dining room, where a tasty midnight supper was served, was especially decorated with flowers.

Was Recluse Murdered?

Edward F. Searles. Howard Donnell. Arthur Walker.

A resident of Methuen, Mass., has written anonymously to District Attorney Donnell, of Essex County, urging exhumation and an autopsy on the body of the late Edward F. Searles, aged eccentric, who died in his mansion, in Methuen, in August 1920. Searles left the bulk of his estate to Arther T. Walker, of New York, for many years secretary to Searles. The letter suggested that Searles "had been hastened to his death." The body will be exhumed and examined. The illustration shows Searles, Walker, Donnell and a view of the Searles estate.

Refugees From Kolchak's Forces Reach Mongolia In Retreat From Turkestan

BY JOSEF W. HALL

Peking, Jan. 3.—The party of Russian officers and men who were discovered in a Chinese inn at Kweihuacheng, the old city of Suiyuan, three weeks ago, by Mr. Philip F. A. Ryan, U. S. Trade Commissioner; Frank Rhea, Mr. A. Bland Calder of the American Commercial Attache's Office and myself, are still prisoners of circumstance in that place.

The Chinese government, busy in the change of administration, has provided no transportation out of Inner Mongolia for the party, and General Ma Fu-hsiang, Tutung of Suiyuan, who is now in Peking endeavoring to get funds from the new Cabinet, is too engrossed with other matters to look after them.

FOURTEEN ILL

The men had spent 115 days coming overland from Sinkiang, whither they had fled upon the breakup of Kolchak's forces, of which they had been part. Upon arrival at Kweihua fourteen out of the twenty were seriously ill with influenza, and one man had died and another was dying when we found them.

The difficulty of assisting Russian refugees of this nature was demonstrated by the experience of the members of our party in endeavoring to find a way out for them. We advised them to communicate with Mr. A. Agarieff, representative of the Chita government in Peking, asking for amnesty and pledging allegiance to the Far Eastern Republic. After considerable questioning as to the nature of the Chita government, of which they had never heard, the men, through their Colonel, wrote a letter to Mr. Agarieff which a member of our party carried to him in Peking.

REFUSES AID

After perusing the letter, Mr. Agarieff said, "These men, who have been the enemies of our government, merely ask my assistance in procuring their return to Siberia. They pledge no allegiance nor make no promises not to join the first White band with which they can make connections, and resume warfare against us again. Indeed, this is what all similar bands of refugees have done. It would be foolish, indeed, for me to assist them back to Siberia to lend their strength to operations against my government."

"But," we argued, "these men pledged us that they would abjure all future connection with military political factions, and that they would make such a promise to you. All they desire, according to their statement to us, is passage back to Russia or Siberia and assurance that they will be allowed to live an unmolested life after their repatriation."

"I can assure them that the amnesty proclamation will hold good in their case," was the implacable answer. "I will write them to this effect. If they do not plot or operate against our government they will be in no wise molested. But I know them too well. They would consider the latest White offensive a godsend, and you would find them enrolled under Verzbitsky forthwith they arrived at Harbin. I cannot ask the Chinese government to repatriate them. Better that they remain where they are. They are safely out of mischief."

And so the men remain in the Chinese inn at Kweihua, in Inner Mongolia, on a ration of 13 catties of raw flour per day. As they die, their surviving companions bury them outside the inn yard.

military, and commercial information than any other class. The conversations they overhear at dinners, while apparently occupied in trying to stare a boiled sea-slug out of countenance, are all carefully stored away for their own information and for future entertainment of other patrons.

Perhaps the presence of foreigners takes some of the sing out of the sing-song girl, for those we have seen at dinners have always appeared as stiff as a petticoat frozen on a clothes line. They sit down awkwardly, apparently all elbows, and respond to conversational advances with as much freedom from restraint as a prisoner chatting with the judge over his plea of guilty or not guilty. We remember one Cantonese girl who peeked out from under her bangs like a festive little skye-terrier and coquetted with all the men around the table. She, however, was decidedly an exception, for the rest of them sat rigidly and were severely proper. The sing-song girl's habit of breaking from this attitude into ear-splitting melody without even blowing a whistle as a warning is always disconcerting to foreign guests.

REPERTOIRE RESTRICTED

There are just twelve numbers in the sing-song maiden's repertoire. Most of them date back to the time when Marco Polo, with an eye on the receipts of Mrs. Polo, waxed somewhat discreetly enthusiastic about the beautiful entertainers of Hangchow. Only one of the twelve, a historical song, would look well in English without extensive fumigation. The sing-song girl is thus spared the cabaret lady's anguish in keeping up with the newest hits, a popular melody being considered new in China if it is under a thousand years old. We know a few foreign orchestras that seem to feel the same way, however.

Though her music is old enough to qualify for a pension, her slang must be this year's model. Every little sing-song girl who takes her career to heart regularly attends a certain theater on Foochow Road famous for its up-to-date patter. There she picks up the latest local idiom and uses it with telling effect in the intervals between the twelve popular selections. Her clothes, too, must be up to the minute. At present a bicycle cap mania is raging, and four entertainers out of five make their appearance with a visored cap pulled low over their eyes, diamonds sparkling ad lib. and a baby hot-water bottle in their hands. A short time ago, there was a mania for the spider bang, an effect achieved by the economical arrangement of about thirty curls over the forehead. Foreign cosmetics and perfumes are considered especially swanky, sing-song girls being fond of dicking out a mirror and applying a lip-stick with all the sang-froid of a New York telephone operator.

THE ONLY GENUINE—

Just as every barnstorming theatrical company in America comes "straight from Broadway," so every little sing-song lady comes straight from Soochow. The tradition that Soochow produces the best-looking women born in China naturally causes every member of the local white-light world to claim it as her birthplace. The language of the city being famous for its melodious quality, it has become the chosen dialect of Foochow Road. Soochow has such a reputation as a center for fashion, wit, and beauty that it is sometimes called "the Paris of China," though we don't think that a Parisian, observing the turgid canals, the winding alleys, and the one-donkey-power of transportation would be much struck by the resemblance.

He who observes the sing-song girl flitting nightly from party to party with nothing more serious on her mind than the hope of attracting large spends of red paper is inclined to wonder where she comes from and what happens to her after the papers come singly and then not at all. Usually she is placed in her profession by parents who hope to see her make a wealthy marriage. With unlimited opportunities for meeting well-to-do men the sing-song girl often does become the Number Two wife of a rich patron and supports her relations in luxury forever after.

If the sands run down in her glass before she succeeds in making such a marriage, she usually has no alternative except to become the little fille de joie for which most foreigners mistake her. Sometimes the sing-song girl ends her musical career at the Kiangwan Home of the Door of Hope, where some of her number are placed by the police on account of being under the legal fifteen-year age limit and where others go voluntarily because they see no way of escaping an unhappy future.

Contrary to popular opinion, and the effect of their diamonds, sing-song girls make but little profit in their professions. The jewels are all the bought or borrowed property of their male employers and the girls are kept so consistently in debt for clothes and support that they have small chance of putting aside even modest savings.

One little girl who was placed in a sing-song house at the age of twelve to learn the noise repertoire of the profession became very homesick after a month or two of instruction. She attempted to run away, was recaptured, and chained to a bed, the mistress of the house threatening her with the terrors of the Door of Hope if she didn't become more docile. The youngster evidently had both an inquiring mind and a bent for mechanics, because she picked the lock, sneaked from the house, and asked the first passerby about the reputation of the Door of Hope. Reassured by the answer, she found her way to the home and applied to the matron for admission, presenting the battered lock as a passport.

The sing-song girls who find refuge at the Door of Hope usually marry fairly well, even though they may fail to achieve the compradore of their early dreams. Government schoolteachers, men in clerical positions, and moderately well-to-do merchants often apply to the institution for wives, and hardly a week goes by without a wedding.

The genus sing-song girl is subdivided into several specie, distributed through different parts of China. Up in Newchang they have a variety which Mr. de Vries would probably call a "sport," this particular type being capable of drinking 150 cups of samshui in one evening without even disturbing the regularity of her bang. The Shanghai type rarely drinks with her patrons. She is distinguished also by her intellectuality, which we have never seen displayed, and by her extreme class consciousness. She even goes so far as to issue a little trade journal in the form of a weekly newspaper called "Sing Song Notes" or something. She belongs to a guild with a duly elected president and the home of the president is known to Shanghai night-life as "The White House."

In one respect at least the powdered little ladies of Foochow Road resemble other powdered ladies in the cabarets at home. In the patois of the electric-lighted Chinese life they are known as "wild chickens."

Chita Delegates Present Another Secret Treaty

(Trans-Pacific News Service Exclusive to The China Press)

Washington, Jan. 5.—Following upon the startling disclosures of alleged secret agreements between Japan and France anent Siberia which have brought the Chita delegation into prominence at the Washington Conference, the representatives of the Far Eastern Republic have brought to light still another secret treaty which they assert was arranged between Japan and the Cossack leader Semenov. The Chita men say the original of this treaty is in the archives of their government at Chita.

By the terms of the alleged agreement Japan promised Semenov a half million yen for which Japan was to be given preferential rights to hunting, fishing and forestry concessions in the Maritime province, in Saghalien and in Kamchatka and also the right to develop gold and other mines in the Maritime, Amur and other provinces.

PROMPT DENIAL

These new disclosures promptly were denied by Baron Kato, head of the Japanese delegation, who asserted that Japan had not given money to Semenov since the war when the various allies and America were co-operating in Siberia. The allegation advanced by the Chita delegates is that the Semenov treaty had been carried out since June 8, 1921.

Secretary of State Hughes made reply today to the denial of the French Government regarding the Chita disclosures. "I am gratified to learn," the Secretary wrote, "that the French Government formally denies it has come to any agreement or carried on any negotiations concerning the status of Siberia with Japan and I am glad to accept your statement that the documents in question are not authentic."

The United States State Department has denied that it possesses any documents corroborating the charges of the Chita delegates.

The charges of the Chita delegates continue to be a leading topic of discussion in Washington though in general the American press is non-committal. Several papers advance the view that the denials the French have made are not sufficient and they say France should give proof that the documents are forged.

The Chinese Minister Alfred Sze has paid visits to Secretary Hughes and Mr. Balfour and according to gossip here has asked them to mediate in the Shantung controversy. Mr. Sze declined to tell the purpose of his visits to Secretary Hughes and to Mr. Balfour and the State Department has denied that any plan for American mediation has been undertaken.

The Chinese have sought to point out some significance in the failure of the Japanese to act on the Shantung question, asserting that cable delays are an invalid excuse since the Chinese delegation is able to get cable messages from Peking in two days.

MAKES ADMISSIONS

(China Press Service)

Washington, Jan. 5.—Baron Kato, in commenting on the Chita charges of a secret pact between Japan and France in Siberia, admitted that Japan had supported Semenoff in Siberia as one means of checking the advances of the Bolsheviki.

Baron Kato said that Japan's support of the Cossack leader had been discontinued after factional differences arose between Semenoff and Admiral Kolchak and Social Revolutionary leaders.

Since the discontinuance of support of Semenoff Japan had remained absolutely neutral in Siberian affairs he asserted.

CHITA OFFERS PROOF

(China Press Service)

Washington, Jan. 5.—In support of their charges that Japan and France had agreed on a Far Eastern Policy whereby Japan would practically dominate Siberia, delegates of the Far Eastern Republic to-tions would be proved by examination of original documents in the archives of the Far Eastern Republic at Chita.

The delegates from Chita suggested that examination of the original documents be undertaken by U. S. Consular officials Mr. Hanihara reiterated that he would carefully investigate the charges.

M. Sarrant on behalf of the French Government emphasised his Government's denial of the charges. He is sending Secretary of State Hughes a memorandum which will formally declare that France and Japan deny the truth of the allegation made by the Chita delegates. The memorandum will add that the delegates represent a government of Russia which is not recognised.

There is an inclination in some quarters not to take the latest and most spectacular development in the Conference seriously, but the accusations have attracted wide attention.

Mixed Court Hears $30,000 Fraud Case

Mr. J. E. Lemiere, appearing for the defendant, asked a remand and Mr. H. C. BUSINESS MEN CAN PREVENT WAR SAYS LAY READER

The world, on account of competition in armament is on the verge of economic wreck; business men are in a unique position to prevent another world war; British and American business men cannot dissociate their successes from religious influence, and the amassing of riches without a record of social service constitutes failure—these were ideas brought forth in a very interesting lecture delivered by the noted lay preacher, Mr. Fred B. Smith, at the Carlton Cafe yesterday at the tiffin given under the auspices of the American Association of China and the Pan-Pacific Association.

Mr. Smith is the Vice-President of the Johns-Manville Co. of New York, manufacturers of asbestos, and has for many years been engaged in the dual occupation of merchant and lay preacher. His present world tour has been undertaken for the Association of Christian Churches to promote World Brotherhood and Permanent Peace.

"On account of the great war," said the speaker, "Europe has been economically ruined. France has run headlong into debt. Germany is incapable of paying her war indemnities. Even the best economical expert has not been able to determine the economic status of Great Britain in an authoritative statement as to whether she is solvent or otherwise. Because she was wise enough to keep out of the war, Switzerland today is the only country in Europe than can hold her head up."

In the opinion of Mr. Smith, the next war, if there is one, will take place in the Orient, but he felt confident that the recurrence of a war like the last one would bring on world bankruptcy because not only is Europe unable to bear the strain of another such conflict, but the United States too, spending about 79 cents out of every dollar of national revenue on her army and navy, is smarting under this heavy financial burden.

A business man, continued the speaker, should not make dollar-chasing his life work but should hitch himself to some great undertaking of a moral, philanthropic or religious character. He said the day will come when the business man, having, through the exercise of economic pressure, put a stop to warfare, will be exalted to a position far above that of the victor on the battlefield, the philosopher and the educationist. He recalled the incident of a very rich American who owns a large tract of land overlooking the Hudson and who has deposited huge quantities of actual gold in the banks but who frankly confessed that he was very unhappy and that an ordinary laborer was in a state of much greater happiness than himself because this multi-millionaire had been hoarding up money for purely selfish ends.

The missionary, according to Mr. Smith, has blazed the path for the merchant by risking his life in the propagation of the Christain religion, and the word religion has been written over the whole history of the British Empire as well as that of the United States, the forefathers of the Americans on the "Mayflower" having dedicated America to God when they declared: "This is to be God's country." He closed with the warning that owing to the uncertainty of man's lease of life he should make use of his riches for rendering service to society.

The speaker told numerous witty anecdotes by which an otherwise serious talk was clothed with an atmosphere of humor much enjoyed by the audience. Mr. V. G. Lyman presided at the meeting.

Conclude Inquest Over Coolie Said To Have Been Beaten Up

The inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of a Chinese coolie alleged to have succumbed as the result of a beating at the hands of an Indian watchman at Anderson, Meyer and Company's yards on Yangtszepoo Road last week was concluded yesterday.

A Chinese watchman and the coolie's companion testified that the Indian stopped the coolie while the latter was carrying a load of wood across the yard, wrenched away a bamboo carrying pole and struck deceased repeatedly across the back. The Indian denied having beaten the man and said he had only tied his hands to prevent his carrying away wood. The report of the doctor who conducted the autopsy stated that death was caused by hemorrhage of an enlarged spleen, which might have been caused by very slight violence. The court returned a verdict to this effect and recommended that the testimony be put in the hands of the police legal adviser.

Mr. R. G. Plea Of Anhui Draws Retort From Peking

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, Jan. 3.—The Government recently received a petition in the name of the Anhui residents of Peking saying that the newspapers of Shanghai, Tientsin and Peking had reported that General Chang Hsun was to be appointed Military Governor of Anhui, that the mandate ordering the arrest of General Chang Ching-yao was to be cancelled and that General Chang would be appointed Civil Governor of Anhui.

The petition described General Chang Hsun as a monarchist leaders guilty of many crimes. Referring to General Chang Ching-yao it said that he had stripped the people of Anhui of every cent they had when he was Tuchun there. These two men, therefore, ought never to be given employment by the Government. If they were appointed to the posts mentioned above it would bring serious trouble to the people of Anhui.

As no trace can be found of the alleged signatories it is assumed that fictitious names were used, but the Premier has now issued a statement saying that the Government never contemplated making either of these appointments.

Shopkeeper Is Fined $500 For Publishing Revolutionary Book

For publishing and selling a book called "The Philosophy of Revolution" the proprietor of a book shop at 124 Foochow Road was fined $500 by the Mixed Court yesterday.

Detective Inspector J. Sullivan testified that on raiding the shop he found nine copies of the volume. The number printed, the defendant said, was 1,500, all except those seized by the police being sold. The shopkeeper declared that he had printed the book on instructions from a client and that it was a compilation of clippings taken from a newspaper printed in Peking. He did not know that he was doing wrong in publishing the matter, he said, particularly as the newspaper editor had not been prosecuted.

CASTORIA
for Infants and Children.
The Effects of Opiates.
THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells, which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying power, are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.
The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cardials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them wilfully with narcotics. Castoria contains no narcotics if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Johnson Goes To Billiard Final By Beating Campos

Will Meet Champion Porter After Chinese New Year At Town Hall

R. C. K. Johnson won into the final with the Shanghai Amateur Billiard Champion, C. W. Forter last night at the Marine Engineers Institute, when he beat J. P. de Campos after a consistent lead, to a final score of 800-738.

The score at half time was Johnson 400, de Campos 372. The average of the players was Johnson 8.7, de Campos 8.0. Johnson led throughout the match. He won on better billiards.

A large crowd attended the match, invited perhaps by Johnson's last performance when he scored a 145 against Capt. Barrett, a record for tournament play. De Campos' win in the second round over Oilerdesson proved a drawing card.

Johnson was off his best game last night. His highest break was a 56, which with a 51, a 47, a 46 aside from several other high thirties and twenties counted up a high score for him. De Campos did no better than one 41, a 34 and a 31.

The first run of mention was by Johnson a 56, followed by a 46 He was leading from the opening of the match. He had his opponent trailing the score at the 400 mark by 28 points. While not in his form in the first rounds he was good enough to retain a lead.

There is not much worth telling to the match. Johnson ran a number of twenties and thirties, one 47 and a 51 to the run out at 800, while de Campos only got into the thirties once when towards the end he ran a string of 31.

Runs of twenty or over in their order were:

Johnson: 56, 46, 21, 38, 38, 25, 23, 21, 25, 34, 51, 47, 20, 20, 21

De Campos: 23, 34, 38, 25, 41, 24, 21, 24, 20, 23, 31, 25

Johnson by his win last night must play off with Porter in the final. The match will take place probably in the Town Hall shortly after the first of February. The date will be announced later.

LAW STUDENTS HEAR ADDRESS BY W.D. MURRAY

Mr. W. D. Murray, a prominent lawyer of New York City, now in China as chairman of the Foreign Department of the International Y. M. C. A., delivered an address yesterday afternoon before the students of the Comparative Law School of China, Law Department of Soochow University. Mr. Murray was introduced by Mr. H. A. Wilbur, of the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Murray spoke first of his early associations with ex-presidents Roosevelt and Taft, and the present Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, emphasising that he mentioned them because of their devotion to Christianity. He said that nothing could be further from the truth than that a lawyer cannot be a true Christian. He pointed out, however, that the profession of law should not be entered merely for the purpose of making money. Success in law is not measured by the money made out of it. In fact, of the many eminent lawyers and judges he had known he could not state who had made large fortunes and who had not. He quoted Ruskin: "Fee first and you are a farce; work first, and you serve the Lord God Almighty."

Next he discussed some of the fundamental principles of the jurisprudence of the United States, stating that although the system there is not to be considered as perfect, yet he hoped that several of its fundamental principles would ultimately prevail all over the world. For instance, in America, if a man is arrested, he is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is shown beyond reasonable doubt by evidence given on behalf of the state, whereas in some countries, the accused is always presumed to be guilty. Again, everyone in the United States is entitled to a fair, open, and public trial, and all of his friends and relatvies may come to see that everything is done as it ought to be done, whereas in some countries the defendant is not only deprived of this privilege, but is even prohibited from introducing evidence on his behalf, and decisions are often rendered in secrecy. Still again, everybody should be allowed the privilege of having counsel, and if he cannot afford to pay for such services, the government should pay for him, whereas this is not the rule in many countries. He added that he ardently hoped for the day when these principles would be universally adopted.

He said that throughout his forty years of active practice in New York, he had become familiar with some of the difficulties and temptations lawyers have to encounter, and gave a number of interesting incidents which had occurred in his experience. In conclusion he stated emphatically that the lawyer should always take a leading part in every public movement, and that pleasure of a lawyer does not lie in the enumeration of his victories in court, but in the reminiscenses of his helpfulness to the public.

JOHNSON MAKES HOT ATTACK ON 4-POWER PACT

(China Press Service)

San Francisco, Jan. 5.—Senator Hiram Johnson of California, in an attack here on the Quadruple Entente, declared that President Harding's erroneous construction of the treaty confirmed the reason why all Americans should carefully study the treaty before approving it.

Senator Johnson asserted that any results of the conference that lessened armaments were received very enthusiastically, but that fact was no reason why everything tendered in secret pacts should be accepted. The California Senator in conclusion fired a broadside at the treaty by asserting that the Quadruple Entente was not related to the original purposes of the conference in any manner.

(2) ELECTRICITY (2)
THE SILENT SERVANT.

¶ A touch of the switch and the Electric Fire immediately gives a bright and cheering heat. Another touch and the heat ceases—just when you wish.

¶ You can carry it to your bed room. Its comforting warmth will protect you from chill. Switch it on in the morning and dress in comfort.

¶ The room which you so seldom use in winter can be made warm at small cost and no attendant work. Decorations and furniture will be protected against damp and the whole home will smell sweeter. An electric fire in the bath room will make for health and comfort.

For particulars and choice of radiators see the types on view in our Showroom.

January 6, 1922

Spot and forward bar silver were each down 3-8d. in London yesterday.

The New York price declined to 64¼ cents, and the London-New York cross rate to 419⅛.

The only changes in the official quotations this morning were a drop in the Gold Dollars rate to 71½ and a rise in the Rupee rate to 257¼.

However, as the market was firm from the opening, the offical Sterling rate was subsequently raised to 3-6, the Gold Dollar rate to 73¼, the Franc rate to 925, the Rupee rate to 263½, and the Yen rate dropped to 65¼.

After the change in rates, the market remained firm, with sellers of Sterling at 3-6⅛ for January, 3-6 for February and 3-5¾ for March.

There were Gold Dollar sellers at the same time at 74¼ for January, 73¼ for February and 72¾ for March.

In the afternoon rates became firmer still, there being sellers at the close for January at 3-6⅝, for February at 3-6¼ and for March 3-5⅞. There were sellers of Gold Dollars at the same time at 74½ for January, 73½ for February and 73 for March. The market closed firm.

India and the Continent sold silver in London yesterday, and the market there is reported as closing easy.

New York report some business done in their market yesterday at the official quotations, but at the close the buyers were satisfied.

In spite, therefore, of our firm market locally, the undertone of the silver market does not appear to be strong.

The Chinese Political Stage

BY JOSEF W. HALL

HE same stage, the same old act, but new actors! However, a swarm of useless supers, who have heretofore cluttered up the scenes, are to be swept off the boards.

So say Liang Shih-yi and Yeh Kung-chow, the moving spirits of the new Cabinet. And Chang Hu, Minister of Finance, agrees with them, for he has abolished several bureaux and "sacked" almost half his staff of clerks—some five hundred persons.

The best of it is that the persons who have received notice of discharge seem immensely pleased. For they are promised their back pay at the end of the month. If they do not receive it, they will refuse to quit. And it is better to be fired and receive five months' back pay than to continue on the payroll forever but never receive a pay envelope.

Liang's government is supposed to be an administration of bankers and railway experts. One of the first things a business man's Cabinet might be expected to do is to deflate the Ministerial staffs by cutting off the parasites who have obtained their places by patronage. Such deflation means a saving of one hundred thousand dollars monthly—on the assumption that departmental employees are paid, which they are not. The saving is, therefore, purely on paper. It is intended as a good example to army chieftains to cut down their forces. The militarists, however, are hardly pervious to good examples.

A significant reaction to the assumption of office of the Liang Cabinet is the hostility of the Japanese, as manifested through their vernacular dailies. This attitude has surprised many, since a number of the Cabinet members are Japanese returned students and are generally regarded as sympathetic to Japanese interests. Premier Liang himself, during the period of his disgrace following the collapse of Yuan Shih-kai's monarchy, spent many months in Japan promoting affiliations with Japanese politicians and bankers. The Japanese ill-will may be inspired by displeasure because no place was found in the new Cabinet for the Japanese favorite, Tsao Ju-lin, or it may spring from deeper motives. It bids fair to be an important factor in the success or failure of the new administration.

For the one great development upon which the new Cabinet is relying to give it money and consequent power is an increase in the Customs revenue, through authorisation to grow out of the Conference in Washington. And Japan, it appears, may prevent the realisation of this hope. America, if we are to believe the reports, could be pursuaded to grant the Chinese delegates all they ask—that is, a twelve and one-half percent tariff, although the Chinese government has done and is able to do none of those things which, it has been understood since the days of the McKay Treaty, are to be the concomitants of the increased tariff. The British government will grant one-third of the increase requested by the Chinese, but the Japanese, as usual, wish to barmain over the matter.

On the prospects of tariff increase, Sir Robert Hotung and a few contemporary "British" Chinese are willing to assist the government over the New Year's crisis. On these prospects the Chinotung Cabinet has built all its plans, and has been presumptuous enough to assume office. On their realisation or failure to materialise the Cabinet will likely stand or fall.

By Admiral Fiske: "U. S. Armament Policy A Disgrace"

BY ADML. BRADLEY A. FISKE
(President Of The United States Naval Institute)

What kind and amount of armament does the United States need? That depends on the policies of our Government, the policies of other governments, and the ways in which our policies may conflict with theirs.

But, reciprocally, our policy and the policies of foreign governments depend on their armaments; on the degree of physical force with which they can support a policy, if need be. The greatest disasters that nations have ever met have been caused by neglecting this principle, and instituting policies without first ascertaining whether their armaments were strong enough to enforce them.

Before deciding on the kind and amount of its armament, therefore, it is necessary for a nation to estimate correctly the polices of other governments and the size and efficiency of their armaments, and then to determine its own policy.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Questions of national policy are, of course, within the province of the Government as a whole; but they are in the immediate province of the Secretary of State. On his perception of the intentions of foreign States, and on his judgment of the force of different kinds which they can exert, both ponderable and imponderable, must depend the policy of the country and therefore the kind and amount of armament it needs.

It is instructive to realise, in this connection, that the most immediate and determining cause of the gross inefficiency of our armament when we entered the World War was the fact that Mr. Bryan had been Secretary of State only a short time before, and had made an estimate of the situation that proved to be wholy incorrect.

If men like William Pitt had been Secretaries of State for a few years prior to the World War, we would have realised the actual world conditions and known what preparation was required. As Aid for Operation of the Navy from February, 1913, till May, 1915, I was intimately in touch with the Setate Department; and I know that it was inefficient in every part that had any bearing on the National Defense.

But while the State Department must lead in making the estimate of the world situation, the State Department must depend on the Navy Department, and to a less degree on the War Department, for its information as to the naval and military armaments of foreign nations, the degree of naval and military force with which they could support any policy that would be inimical to our interests, the actual state of our own armament, and whatever changes in our armament may be needed to meet the situation.

U. S. LACKS A VON TIRPITZ

These matters are within the province of the Secretary of the Navy, and to a less degree the Secretary of War. Therefore, these high officials should be men so well trained in international policies as to be able to estimate correctly the naval and military situation throughout the world. But this will not avail, unless they are also so well trained in strategy and in engineering as to be able to judge correctly whether our armament is adequate or not and to take the proper measures to make it adequate if it is not adequate.

But no matter how highly efficient both Secretaires may be, it is manifest that the wide scope of their duties makes it impossible for them to do more than exercise the most general direction. For this reason, it is also manifest that they must have highly efficient General Staffs of officers who are expert in strategy and engineering to assist them.

It is also evident that, since the navy and army must co-operate, with mutual understanding, the Secretary of the Navy should have a considerable acquaintance with military strategy and that the Secretary of War should have a considerable acquaintance with naval strategy. For this reason, it would be of great advantage to have one man at the head of both, provided that a man could be found having an expert knowledge of both. This would be essential, of course—even Napoleon failed when he tried to direct operations.

It may occur to some that these qualifications for a Secretary of the Navy are impossible to find. The answer is that those qualifications have already been found. They were found in Admiral von Tirpitz, who was Secretary of the German Navy from 1897 to 1915, and who raised that navy from the position of almost a nonentity to that of the second navy in the world in size and the first in efficiency. If Germany could find such a man to head her first line of defense, cannot the United States?

No. Tirpitz was the product of a desire by Germany to get the best possible armament for the least possible money. The people of the United States have never shown any such desire. Their interest in armament has always been sporadic and far from thoughtful. The reason is that they have always been coddled with the false prophesy that there would never be another war—the result has been that they have been unprepared for each war as it came along, and have consequently suffered to an unnecessary degree in blood and money.

DEPENDS ON POLICY

It may seem that I have dodged the whole question of what kind of armament we need, what number and kind of ships, guns, soldiers, etc., and talked pure generalities. I am doing this purposely; because I wish to make it clear that armament depends on pre-existing policy, and that it is folly to decide on the details of any armament until the policy is known for enforcing which the armament is needed.

In 1913 and the early part of 1914, when General Wood was Chief of Staff of the Army and I occupied the similar position of Aid for Operations of the Navy, our relations with Mexico were exceedingly disturbed; but neither General Wood nor I could ascertain what was the policy of the Government, and neither of us was called into consultation with reference to the ability of the army and navy to support it.

The only exception occurred on April 20, 1914, when we were called to a conference at the White House, the evening before the attack on Vera Cruz. At this conference neither of us said anything that I can recollect, and Mr. Bryan and Mr. John Lind said nearly everything that was said.

It was decided to take no immediate action; but I was called from my bed at four o'clock in the morning and directed to send a telegram ordering Admiral Fletcher to land and seize the Custom House.

It is my recollection that General Wood knew nothing of this until he read about it in the papers the following morning. He and I had worked out a joint plan, but it was never used or even asked for.

Fletcher took the Custom House at a cost of four Americans killed and twenty-one wounded. Later operations brought the number of Americans killed up to nineteen and many wounded, besides greater casualties among the Mexicans.

CONFUSION A "DISGRACE"

The reason given for taking the Custom House of a nation with which we were at peace was that shortly after the conference adjourned, information was received that two steamers bearing munitions for certain Mexicans would reach Vera Cruz that morning. The order to Fletcher reached him too late to prevent one of the steamers from landing her goods; but the other one landed her goods shortly afterward at Puerto, Mexico, 135 miles distant, by permission of the State Department!

This is merely one illustration out of countless others since the beginning of our history of the lack of understanding by the people of the United States of the way to handle their armament. History is full of disasters that have resulted from similar procedures.

But the Secretary of State and the Secretaries of War and Navy, with even the best of General Staffs, cannot themselves settle the armament question; because Congress insists not only on deciding how much money to spend on armament, but even on deciding the various numbers and kinds of units of which it shall consist!

The fact is that the whole question of providing proper armament for the United States is in a condition of confusion that is disgraceful to a civilised nation. No systematic study has ever been given to the subject; no guiding principles have ever been followed; the most important questions have nearly always been decided in the end by non experts; and, as a result, we have fallen immeasurably behind such countries as Germany and Japan in getting a national defense that had an effectiveness at all commensurate with its cost.

For this reason, the Conference on Limitations of Armament cannot fail to do enormous good to the United States; for it will make the people see how vital it is to the safety of the nation that the whole subject of armament be dragged out of the mess of ignorance in which it is developed.

The subject of armament is the most important subject before the world. It will affect the happiness of your children and grandchildren immeasurably more than all the petty questions of every day that look big only because they are near.

Fortunately, the general problem can be easily solved; because the principles underlying armament are simple, and are clearly set forth in history. Those principles are as applicable now as ever—for, disregarding details of time and place, "history repeats itself."

By Josephus Daniels: "Put Limit On Aircraft"

"Otherwise Agreement To End Competitive Armament Falls Short"

"Certainly There Is Ground for Debate Whether the Day of Dreadnought Dependence Is Not Passing. The Fighting Airship Will Probably Decide the Issue in the Next War. Why Not Discard the Doctrine of Relativity in Armament?"

Is there any connection between Einstein's relativity and the Disarmament Conference?

Secretary of State Hughes has given some illumination to the question of relativity which was widely discussed. In his opening address he demonstrated that it could be applied to reduction of armament, and then brought it into the range of comprehension of many who had hitherto thought it a nebulous psychology or a high-sounding phrase.

What is relativity?

A few months ago Mr. Einstein was trying to explain this modern theory to us. Some of the collegians understood it, or said they did. There are high-brows who will not admit that any new theory or science or psychology, or whatever Einstein was driving at, is too deep for them. Others frankly admitted that Einstein was too abstruse for them.

I read several articles, and must confess it was beyond me. Either those who sought to throw light upon it failed or my mind did not respond.

It may be, in my case, what former President Wilson said of a young man at Princeton. Seeking to excuse his inability to give correct answers to the questions asked him, the young man said:

"Dr. Wilson, this is a very dull subject."

Instantly the then Princeton professor replied: "There is no subject in the course that is dull. It is only the mind that is brought to it that is dull."

What Einstein could not make lucid and plain Mr. Hughes has brought down to the level of the average mind. As construed by Secretary Hughes, as it relates to armament, relativity means five big ships for the United States, five for Great Britain and three for Japan.

Now do you feel that you are a master of the doctrine or theory of relativity?

AS TO DREADNOUGHTS

All military strength is relative. If no other nation on the earth had a sixteen inch gun the United States would be master of the world if it had one single sixteen-inch gun properly placed.

If the greatest naval power had only one dreadnought we would need only two dreadnoughts to be mistress of the seas. If no nation had an army of more than 5,000 men and could not quickly mobilise another army, the United States with an army of 10,000 men would be the greatest military power on earth.

For many years—in fact, ever since the German Kaiser told his people "Germany's destiny is on the sea," and began to construct a giant navy—Great Britain, foreseeing "der tag" which came in 1914, adopted a 2 to 1 naval program—that is, whenever Germany laid the keel for one dreadnought Great Britain laid the keel for two as powerful or more so. This was Einstein's theory, as I understand it, and as virtually applied by Secretary Hughes to naval strength.

When the great Italian naval constructor Caunibert conceived the idea of the all-big-gun ship which Great Britain adopted and called the dreadnought, the day that first dreadnought was completed all the other fighting battleships of the world were virtually thrown upon the scrap-heap.

Some economical men in Great Britain objected to the first dreadnought for that very reason—that it would render obsolete all the big ships that had been built at such great expense. Though an Italian constructor conceived the idea, his country did not adopt it then, and the reason, perhaps, was the cost as well as the fact that its construction would make all the other fighting ships as much out of date as my lady's last year's bonnet.

England adopted the all-big-gun ship and relegated all its other ships into back numbers because the able men in the Admiralty feared that if they did not build that powerful floating fort the Germans would beat them to it.

It was all a case of relativity, though neither the British nor German naval statesmen had then ever heard of Einstein or the relativity doctrine. But Great Britain said: "We must be twice as strong upon the sea to be sure of victory over Germany."

Its mistake was in pinning all its strength to capital ships. Indeed, until the war of 1914 all big navy nations regarded the dreadnought as the beefsteak of the fighting fleet and destroyers and submarines as only entrees and spices and sweets.

Germany had been some wiser, because in his book Admiral Jellicoe gives Germany credit for having better destroyers than he had constructed for the British navy. And we all know Germany had given more attention to submarines than other big navy building nations. Sir Percy Scott said later that if Germany had possessed fifty more submarines in 1914 than it had, the British islands would have been made a German colony and Englishmen would have been speaking German.

U. S. AND JAP NAVIES

The first naval head to propose the plan of relativity and a vacation in building dreadnoughts was Winston Churchill. In 1913 he tendered to Germany the proposition for both nations to quit building dreadnoughts. At that time the British navy was much stronger than the German navy. Two dreadnoughts a year was the British program and one a year was the German program.

In substance Mr. Churchill—then First Lord of the British Admiralty—said to the Germans: "If both of us quit now our relativity will be the same. (Mr. Churchill did not use the word "relativity" then because Einstein had not then invented it.) Both nations will be saving many million dollars in construction and in operation and the comparative standing of the navies will be unchanged."

He argued with much force—the same character employed by Secretary Hughes at the Disarmament Conference—that a vacation would leave each nation in the same position without further expansion. Germany declined to consider the vacation suggestion, holding that Great Britain wished to keep the German navy permanently at half the size of the British navy. And while it never equalled that of its antagonist, the Germans kept a free hand to build destroyers and submarines.

Giving the United States eighteen dreadnoughts to Japan's ten reduces the relativity which naval experts have felt should be maintained between these two nations.

In view of the fact that our navy has no bases in the Far East and we would have to sail 6000 miles if engaged in war in that part of the world naval experts have figured that to be certain of victory the United States navy should have three times the strength of the Japanese navy.

That was "relativity" of pre-war estimates. War with Japan would be no trifling affair if we had to send our ships and soldiers 6,000 miles to the scene of action.

The big question as to the size of a navy has always been relative. Every nation has given heed to its probable enemy. If we expected to fight France, we would need a much smaller navy than if we expected to fight Great Britain.

The General Board prepared Black Plans and Yellow Plans of naval war, depending upon with which nation it was making its plans for a possible war. Without agreement with other nations, the General Board wisely laid down the only plan for the United States in these words:

"The navy of the United States should ultimately be equal to the most powerful maintained by any other nation in the world."

That policy cannot be departed from without agreement with other big navy nations. As that agreement, long desired, seems to be assured, the question arises as to what should be the policy as to the size of navies when competition in navy building is to give place to leaving only enough navies to prevent an imitator of Germany trying again to enforce its decrees.

With an agreement between all big navy nations, why should the doctrine of relative strength prevail? Did not "relativity" end with competitive building?

By what process of reasoning is Great Britain to have eighteen great dreadnoughts, the United States eighteen and Japan ten. Why would not nine and nine and three be just as capable of preserving the peace of the world? And why could not even this number be reduced when the world is composed so that there is no danger of another Kaiser trying to rule the world? Should not the doctrine of relativity go overboard with the policy of competition?

The plan of relative strength proposed to the conference at Washington is based upon two assumptions:

1.—That the dreadnought is to remain the real sea fighter and that the nation having the most capital ships will be the mistress of the sea. Is that a sound assumption in view of the lessons of the war? The battleship is a tough old bird and experience does not justify the admonition of Lord Fisher, "Scrap them all." But certainly there is ground for debate whether the day of dreadnought dependence is not passing.

2.—The second assumption contained in Secretary Hughes' proposal is that there is no need to place limitations upon ships of the air. Each nation seems to be free to build as many aircraft as possible.

Does this mean that the American delegation regards "airy navies battling in the central blue" as negligible? If so, there are very many experts in all nations who take sharp issue with them. The fighting airship will probably decide the issue in the next war, if we should have a next war.

Agreement to end competitive armament falls far short of effectiveness if the agreement for relative strength does not extend to aircraft.

The Germans at Versailles objected strenuously to the decree limiting their navy that flies. But the Allies firmly held down the number. They stood upon solid ground when they said that it would be fatal to limit the number of surface craft and undersea craft the German navy could possess without also interdicting unlimited ships that fly.

LIMIT AIRCRAFT

More progress has been made in aeroplanes in the past five years than in anything else. And the development of the airship is in its infancy. If the fear of France should materialise the next European war would be heralded by destruction of cities from the air.

Unless limitation is placed upon warfare from above the earth, we may find that all the relative strength has been placed on weapons which in five years will have been relegated by bombs from the air to a secondary position.

There are some things which the world must not forget:

1.—The first is that when in 1916 the United States began its great naval program it pledged itself to reduce and quit building as soon as an international agreement could be reached;

2.—In the early part of 1914 President Wilson, through Colonel House, personally urged the Emperor of Germany to agree to join the United States, France and Great Britain to make war such as came in August, 1914, impossible;

3.—The fourth of the Fourteen Points, accepted by France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan and the other Allies, and also by Germany, was in these words:

"Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety," and that article eight of the Covenant of the League of Nations declares that "the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations."

All the delegates to the conference now in session, except those from the United States, come from countries which have ratified the treaty to end competitive armament. They are concerned only as to details, and are happy to see America, after two years of drifting, plainly declaring now to join with them in doing what they pledged themselves to do in 1919.

Are relative strength and balancing of programs necessary if we agree to quit building in competition?

Why not discard altogether the doctrine of relativity?

Cotton Market

In their weekly cotton market report, Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld and Son write as follows:

China Cotton.—The market has been active during the past week and a further material advance has been established, with a more general interest on the part of the outside public which freely enlisted on the Bull side, while among the more professional element the improvement in values has induced the liquidation of a good deal of long cotton.

While we have little confidence in the market, it would hardly be advisable to consider the situation from quiet as bearish a standpoint as we did during the previous break. At that time the outlook was bad and extreme bears were talking confidently of a further decline from the low level reached on December 21, 1921, while even among those who were bullish there were none who could have believed an advance of four taels in a fortnight as among the possibilities. The very fact that such an advance took place, like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky, brought about considerable modification of extreme ideas and has reacted on the general situation.

Meanwhile the bull clique are thoroughly elated and, with their big winnings behind them, it certainly looks for the moment as if prices might be put higher in sympathy with the rise in the Indian grades regardless whether the level may or may not prove to be warranted in the long run. Pending the action of both the "Indian Cotton" and local "Silver Exchange" markets, we hesitate to advise our friends against taking advantage of the speculative movement, but we think great caution is advisable in following the advance further.

Yarn.—The yarn market has had a steady undertone during the past week with a slight weakness showing at the close. Trading between local dealers continued in fairly large quanties and a steady market is looked forward to for the near future.

SPUNT AND CO. REPORT

China Cotton.—Owing to the New Year holidays we have had another short week, during which comparatively very little business transpired and although at one time there were signs of prices waning, such were found to be of a very transitory nature and the rates remained steady at the close. There being fundamentally no change in the cotton situation it may be said to continue on the same level as last reported and as pointed out previously, having in view the proximity of the Chinese New Year important settlements any offerings at favorable rates should not be overlooked, as to foster bearish sentiments on the present trend of the market would, we venture to state, be unwise for the time being. Tone of the market, steady.

Italy Complains Germany Fails To Ship Livestock

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Jan. 5.—According to advices from Rome the Giornale d'Italia bitterly complains that the German livestock due to Italy under the Reparations scheme, has not been delivered on the ground that an epidemic is raging in the German collecting stations.

The paper adds that horses are not affected by this epidemic but that nevertheless Germany has only delivered 380 horses out of the 5,500 due.

Financial Pact Injured France, Briand Charges

Brussels, Jan. 5.—In an interview with a Belgian journalist at Cannes M. Briand is reported to have accused Britain of isolating France and Belgium by the Financial agreement of August 13, 1921.

He promised to support Belgian priority in connection with Reparations, if Belgium supported France against England and Italy on the moratorium question.

Will Offer Prize To French Authors

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Jan. 5.—A telegram from Rio de Janeiro states that M. Zaharoff has announced that he will give an annual prize of 20,000 francs for the best novel written during the year by young French authors.

The decision is in the hands of a literary jury, headed by M. Paul Bourget.

The prize will be known under the name of the "Balzac award.

Chang Mou-ling Is Shot For Robbery

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, Jan. 3.—Major Chang Mou-ling, an adopted son of General Chang Ching-yao, was shot yesterday at Nanyuan by the order of General Chang Tso-lin. It appears that Major Chang was at Nanyuan with the Fengtien troops and had recently been found guilty of several robberies.

The case was referred to General Chang Tso-lin, and it was agreed upon by the adopted father and the Fengtien Generalissimo that the death sentence should be carried out. A firing party ended the matter yesterday morning.
